Exercise 3

Read the passage carefully.

Sharon was the class treasurer. Whenever there was a monthly collection, Sharon would go to every student and collect a dollar. She would then put a tick against the name of the student in her list so that she would know he or she had contributed to the class fund. Sharon would put the class fund into a money box. It came with a key and a lock. The money collected over the months was used to spend on special events such as Teacher's Day or Children's Day.

There was once when Sharon found a two-dollar note on the ground. She tried to find its owner. However, when no one claimed the money after a week, she put it in the money box after consulting her teacher. For this honest act of hers, Sharon was awarded the most honest student in her school.

Sharon was not only honest but truthful as well. She believed that truthfulness was more impressive than any other quality. She believed that cheating was for those who wanted to take shortcuts or take credit for something that they had not done.

Answer these questions in complete sentences.

Exercise 1

Read the passage carefully.

It was Polly's eighth birthday. Her family went to the park early to set up her birthday party. The park had many tables, so they covered some of them with pink and red cloths. There was also a pavilion, just in case of rainy days.

Polly had made up her mind to get wet during her birthday celebration. She could not resist the slides and a water sprinkler area near her birthday venue. Her father blew up colorful balloons and tied them to the fence along the play area. One by one, Polly's friends arrived. They each brought a beautifully wrapped present for Polly which she carefully placed on a table next to the cake.

The party was soon in full swing. The children played football and other party games. When they were tired, they went to the tables to rest. They had lemonade while they chatted. When the food was finally served, everyone quietened down and started to eat. There were hotdogs, popcorn, cotton candy, and more.

Finally, it was time to cut the cake. Everyone sang the birthday song. Polly made a wish and blew out all her candles before cutting the cake. Everyone clapped and cheered. After eating the cake, the children had fun on the slides and dashed through the water sprinkler until the party ended. Polly brought her gifts home and opened them in her bedroom. She wrote thank you cards to each of her friends for their gifts.

Answer these questions in complete sentences.

- 1 Why do you think Polly's family went early to the park?

- 2 What was the use of the pavilion?

---

- 3 Name two types of food that was served at Polly's party.

---

- 4 How did Polly and her guests entertain themselves at the party?

---

---

- 5 What kind of person do you think Polly was based on the last sentence in the fourth paragraph?

Exercise 2

Read the passage carefully.

It was a clear cloudless night. Zen, who was staying with his grandparents during the summer break, looked at the night sky. He wondered aloud why the village sky was so different from the night sky in the big city where he lived. His grandfather explained that due to the bright lights, smoke, and dust that were found in big cities, the sky would, therefore, be rarely clear.

Zen pointed to the moon. He asked his grandfather to tell him more about the moon. "The moon revolves around the Earth. When astronauts first landed on the moon, they found that the moon's surface was dusty and barren. It also had many craters of different sizes and a large number of steep and high mountains," his grandfather pointed out.

"Do all of them twinkle? What are those star-like objects that do not twinkle?" asked Zen, pointing at the stars next.

"They are planets. The moon is the brightest in the night sky. The stars, the planets, the moon, and many other objects in the sky are called celestial objects. The study of celestial objects and associated phenomena is called astronomy," Zen's grandfather said.

"I love the stars," Zen remarked. "I can't count them all"

Grandfather laughed. "There are a large number of stars in the sky, Zen. Stars emit light of their own. Do you know that the Sun is also a star?"

Zen eyes widened. “Why does it appear so large compared to the other stars then?”

“The stars are much farther away than the Sun. Therefore, they appear as tiny points in the sky to us. The stars are present during the daytime, too. It is just that they are not visible then because of the bright sunlight.”

“Wow. I didn’t know that,” exclaimed Zen. “Grandfather, what about the...”

Grandfather smiled and agreed. He told Zen that they could discuss more about space and the universe the next day. Zen yawned and nodded. Together, the three of them entered the house.

Answer these questions in complete sentences.

- ① How is the village sky different from that in the big cities?

- ② What are the stars, the moon, and many objects in the sky called?

---

3 Describe the surface of the moon.

---

4 Write a phrase that means “send something out”.

5 Where do you think Zen’s grandmother was before she joined Zen and his grandfather?

6 Why couldn’t Zen continue his conversation with his grandfather about the space and the universe that night?
